

Liability-driven investing:

A more prudent way to manage an organization's defined benefit plan funding status?

A suite of liability-driven investment Separate Accounts from Principal®

It used to be that most plan sponsors with defined benefit (DB) plans concentrated on maximizing returns, intent on making ground on the funded status of their organization's plan. These days, more plan sponsors would like to focus on managing risk and stabilizing required contributions using liability-driven investment (LDI) strategies. Traditionally, however, LDI strategies were only cost effective and implemented efficiently for very large plans with enough assets to create custom bond portfolios. In fact, LDI strategies were difficult for many plans to even consider.

Why Principal LDI Separate Accounts?

Match durations

A key to successful LDI management is matching the duration of a plan's assets to that of its liabilities. What you'll find with the unique Principal LDI Separate Accounts is that each one covers a distinct duration band. And you can combine several Principal LDI Separate Accounts to closely align with the cash flows and duration of your plan's assets and liabilities.

Best of all, the suite of Principal LDI Separate Accounts allows plan sponsors of all sizes the ability to customize allocations between the LDI Separate Accounts.

An emphasis on corporate bonds

The corporate bond emphasis is important because the funded status of DB plans is closely tied to the corporate interest rate environment. And the suite of Principal LDI Separate Accounts, with a conservative emphasis on corporate bonds, has done a good job of reducing volatility in the funded status of plans.

Supported by the due diligence process of Principal Life Insurance Company

We use the due diligence process to identify, hire and retain top investment managers. We conduct a comprehensive and continuous review of all managers.¹ This is so you know we have a diverse set of investment options.

Using the suite of Principal LDI Separate Accounts, plan sponsors can efficiently implement a cost-effective strategy for the organization's DB plan, no matter its size.

The Principal Life LDI Separate Accounts can help you implement your LDI strategy, no matter the plan size.
